Engaging undergraduate students in research, scholarship, and creative activity is a proven and powerful practice for enhancing educational outcomes and expanding frontiers of knowledge. This book is a rich collection featuring institutions that are maximizing the impact of this practice by including:

- underrepresented ethnic and racial minorities,
- students with disabilities,
- females,
- students of lower socioeconomic status,
- first- and second-year students, and
- others not traditionally involved in the new development of new knowledge.

Examples of high-quality, inclusive programs from community colleges, primarily undergraduate institutions, minority-serving institutions, comprehensive universities, and research universities will help faculty, staff, and administrators enhance:

- the lives of their students,
- the direction of their scholarship, and
- the impact of their disciplines and institutions.
